▼ Downgrade vs. estimates in January 2026

Estimates as of January 2026

Source: RBI/Raiffeisen Research, April 2026

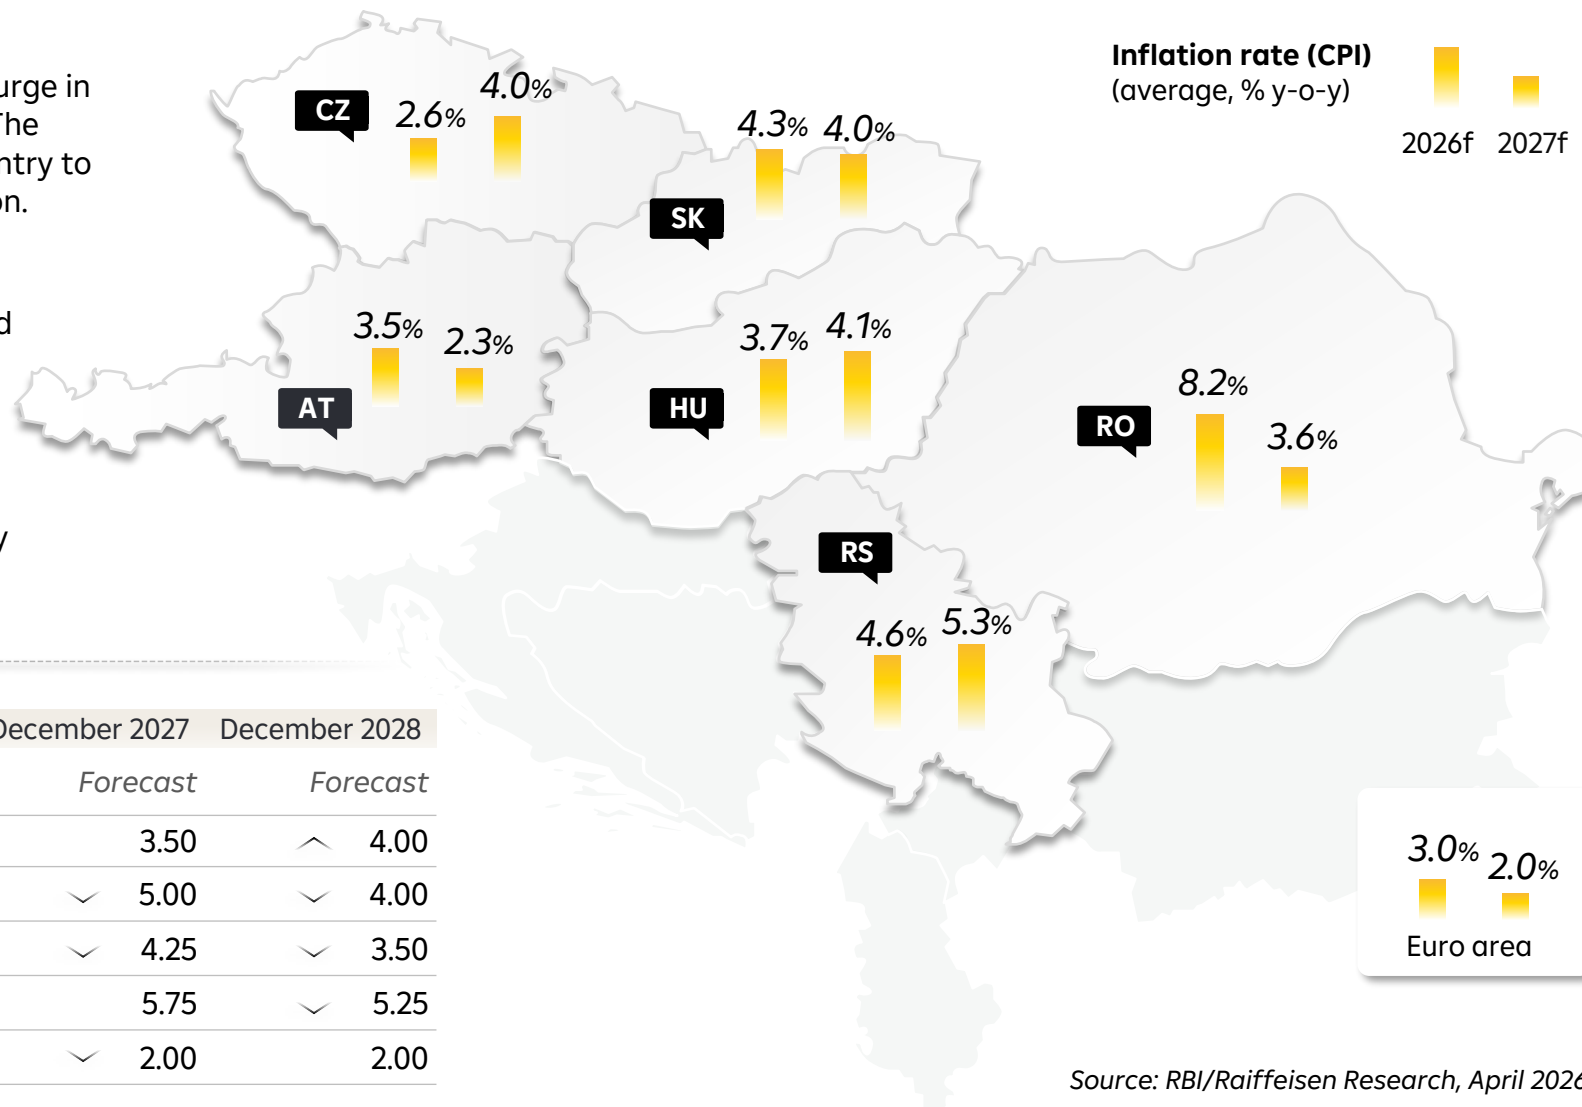

- Geopolitics and the corresponding oil supply shock are in focus. Europe is less directly affected than in 2022, leading to more moderate rise in gas and electricity prices so far
- Pronounced slowdown expected in 2026 - cyclical upswing to resume in 2027
- Headwinds to consumption and investments from inflationary risks, high(er) rates and elevated uncertainty
- Net-exports face remain threatened by tariffs and Asia's exposure to the Middle-East conflict
- Trade-open manufacturing hubs with more energy intensive industries will suffer more, while SEE tourist destinations might benefit from their status as safe and nearby options
- EU funds are expected to give some support to investments
- Fiscal consolidation is expected to continue to weight on growth in Slovakia and Romania

Inflation

- Inflation is expected to pick up rapidly due to the surge in energy prices, although not to levels seen in 2022. The trajectory of inflation is expected to vary from country to country with differences in government intervention.

Banking sector view

- Q1/2026 lending trends in CE/SEE largely unaffected by conflict in the Middle East. More cautious borrower sentiment could be possible near term
- Loan growth potential in retail segment remains. Corporate demand for short-term credit facilities may be supported by higher inflation vs. potentially softer demand for investment loans
